“A little long.”

“Great program!”

“Incredible event! Thank you!”

“Invaluable for college students.”

“Send them again! Excellent program!!”

“Loved them!! <3 XOXO”

Additional Notes:

This event was very successful. It is recommended that it be hosted again, but in the beginning of the Fall Semester. This event provided information that would be most useful in the beginning of the school year, especially for Freshman.

Regarding the assessment questions, it is suggested that less subjective questions be asked. Many of the questions in the assessment are dependent on personal preferences or practices, making it difficult to assess whether they are correct or not.

In conversations had with Joni and Esther, a service called Rape Aggression Defense (RAD) was mentioned and suggested. It is advised that this service be investigated. A good follow up program to SexEd Bootcamp would be an on-campus series of RAD or the opportunity for students to take part in such a program.

h. Additional Comments:

Due to the timing of this program, many students had to leave early. This program was scheduled to start at 3:30 and last approximately one hour. Unfortunately, many students attend classes that begin at 4, requiring them to leave half an hour early. It is suggested that future events such as this be scheduled to begin at 3.

Comments about changing behavior:

It served as a reminder to be tolerant and when I am feeling judgmental to consider someone else's experience

I now believe I need to be less critical. I also want to be more informed. I will start with liking the page and will continue to do some more research.

Just that I want to do a better job as a man to show understanding and compassion.

Social media is powerful in both constructive and destructive ways when creating dialogue about rape culture and slut-shaming.
