EDA 7943: Field Study Reflective Paper

Submitted by: Lori Miller Submitted to: Dr. Valerie Bryan Date Submitted: November 14, 2011 The South Florida Chapter of the American Society for Training and Development (ASTD) formed a Palm Beach County Geographic Interest Group (GIG) in January 2010. In its inaugural year, I served as President Elect and Vice President of Programs. As of January 2011, I have been serving as the board President. This paper documents my reflections on the year and my learning experience, with particular focus to the past three months when this service has simultaneously been my FAU field study. It is worth noting the implied; because I was in a board leadership role, my FAU role as researcher has had its limits.

Because the entirety of Palm Beach GIG's board of directors is voted in yearly, they continuously experience Tuckman's stages of forming, storming, norming, and performing. For the first two months of the year, the GIG was forming. Although there was strategic focus, the board members worked to build relationships with one another. Disagreements were rare, and the GIG seemed to operate to keep the status quo rather than move the board and work of the GIG ahead.

In March, a key board member, the Vice President of Administration, stepped down due to competing priorities. A new board member was quickly identified for this critical position. While the new board member was oriented to her position, other board members began to experience some of Tuckman's storming; it became clear that members were positioning themselves to best carry out the work of the GIG as well as their own personal agendas. For example, the VP of Membership quickly brought the new VP of Administration under her wing, knowing that this relationship would be critical to the VP of Membership's ability to meet her membership retention goals.

The GIG's storming was short lived and quickly moved onto norming. The GIG operated effectively and smoothly. Work was being done and the GIG was moving forward in achieving the goals set forth in its strategic plan's main focus of quality programming. In addition to hosting its bimonthly meetings, the GIG spearheaded a joint disciplinary conference with three other professional organizations.

Retrospectively, the GIG had entered its performing phase. However, I believe that although we were functioning and achieving our goals, the GIG board was not operating at its best. There were some serious issues with the new Vice President of Administration. Although she had been oriented to the new position, she was failing to fulfill her duties. She missed several board meetings with no notice, and the board was left to scramble and ensure her work was done (taking the minutes). Additionally, she failed to attend programs for which she was the person responsible for handling all aspects of registration both before and during. When I initiated a discussion with her about this, she insisted that she was unaware of these requirements (although documentation proves she had received and signed off on the organizational bylaws). She stressed that she would do better, but was feeling overwhelmed by the loss of her job. Her number one priority was finding work. While I understood this, I suggested that she consider stepping down to allow herself the time she needed to focus on the job hunt. Because she was so insistent that she could handle seeking unemployment while not neglecting her board responsibilities, I gave her the benefit of the doubt and allowed her to continue on the board

When several more missed board meetings and programs passed with other board members picking up the slack of the VP of Administration, I consulted with the board chair of the South Florida board as well as the executive leadership of my team. I told them I was going to remove her from the board of directors. I had their full support, with several on my team stating that it was a difficult decision and not one they felt they would have the courage to make, but that it was what was best for the board. When I had the discussion with the VP of Administration, it was not pretty. She stated that I had "poisoned the board against [her]." Couldn't I understand her predicament? "Of course not, [I had] a job." I tried to rationalize with the VP, stating that I was sympathetic to her situation. However, she had failed to uphold any of her responsibilities associated with ASTD. Ironically, had she done so, she would be in a better position by having networked extensively with other professionals in the field. I reminded her of the bylaws outlining that being on the board required her to simply notify myself before a meeting or event that she was not going to be there so that I could ensure we had her work covered and were not left frantically covering up for her. Her notifications after the meetings were not helpful; of course, we knew that she was not there. While I appreciated the apologies for missing meetings and events retrospectively, they did nothing in terms of ensuring her duties were completed beforehand.

Although the board members still covered for the VP of Administration's work following her forced removal, I do believe we truly entered the performing state and were recognizing our full potential. Several board members thanked me for her removal. They were reenergized knowing that the board leadership recognized and acknowledged the work they were doing that was both their own and the VP of Administration's. They were more focused. We developed and implemented a transfer of learning survey to send to program participants 30 days after events to document whether or not they were implementing concepts presented.

We planned a free give back to the community event for January. When it came time to work on our succession planning, board members were actively engaged. The Director of Finance nominated herself for the critical VP of Administration role in 2012. Other board members signed on for another year of service and also identified new candidates who would enhance the board in the upcoming year.

When the new board was elected in late September, I prepared the outgoing and incoming board members to strategically plan for the year of work ahead in 2012. I led a discussion utilizing the ASTD Next Level tool. This assessment is included as another piece of my semester project. By determining and documenting our current baseline, the board was able to choose both reflect on our accomplishments as well as identify points of focus for ongoing work.

Throughout 2011, leading the ASTD Palm Beach GIG provided me with a valuable growth opportunity, both personally and professionally. Throughout each of the forming, storming, norming, and performing stages, I learned a great deal about group dynamics as well as myself as a leader.

Summary of GIG Assessment Using ASTD Next Level Tool

The American Society for Training and Development (ASTD) Next Level Tool is designed for local chapters to assess themselves as Emerging, Solid, or High Performing across six dimensions: communication, community outreach, financial, governance, membership, and professional development. Because the Palm Beach County Geographic Interest Group (PBC GIG) is in its second year, I felt it was important for us to complete this tool to benchmark where we are. Completing this tool and analyzing our results allowed us the opportunity to reflect on our progress and determine areas of focus as we move ahead into a new calendar year with a new board of directors. By completing the tool annually, we will also be able measure and document our progress. It is important to note that this tool is designed for Chapters as opposed to Geographic Interest Groups, although the board chose to complete the tool from a GIG perspective. Also, the South FL ASTD is piloting this tool for ASTD National. Therefore, there may be changes to the form in the future based upon feedback from the South Florida Chapter as well as the other Chapters involved in the pilot. Additionally, it is worth noting that as the GIG Board President, my role as a researcher for the purpose of this field study is limited.

The tool was distributed to board members at the August board meeting. Members were asked to complete the tool on their own before October's meeting. In October, board members partnered with each other to compare their assessments and come to a group consensus. There were no outlying perspectives; the board generally agreed upon the rankings within the dimensions.

In the dimension of Communication, the GIG board rated itself as Solid. The Chapter has a website with a GIG page which is updated at least monthly. Additionally, the GIG utilizes various social media outlets: Facebook, Twitter, and LinkedIn. While the board actively engages in the use of these tools to message program/meeting information as well as post training related content, our membership is not currently actively posting as well.

In the dimension of Community Outreach, the GIG board is Emerging. Although we do currently have a community outreach event scheduled for January 2012, to date there have been none. The board decided to not credit itself for the January event since it has not yet occurred.

In the dimension of Financial, the board is also Emerging. We primarily operate at break-even costs with the exception of the conference being a slight money maker. Of course, as a non-profit group, this is the expectation. We strive to keep costs down for members and participants. Additionally, we have little to no income beyond membership dues and program fees. I believe this criterion is one which relates more to Chapters than GIGs. Although both GIGs and Chapters can get sponsors, share events, etc., only Chapters can participate in the CHIP code funding provided by ASTD National.

In the dimension of Governance, the GIG rates as Solid. While we are 100% CORE compliant, we do not have it built into our operating plan. However, I see this as a function of the South Florida Chapter, of which the GIG is a part; CORE requirements do not pertain to GIGs. The GIG board positions are filled with leadership fully engaged. We meet monthly and have an annual retreat (which are High Performing indicators). We utilize volunteers (the entire board is volunteers with additional members at large) and resources such as the Next Levels tool from ASTD National.

In the dimension of Membership, the GIG is again Solid. Although there is currently no membership retention plan, the GIG does exceed the 30% threshold of joint (both national and local chapter) membership. Additionally, we offer at least one dedicated networking event per year for our members while also building networking time into each program.

In the Professional Development dimension, the GIG is Emerging. As a GIG, the expectations are not as stringent at those listed in the Chapter tool. For example, while the Chapter offers monthly programming, each GIG (Palm Beach County and Miami) minimally hosts 6 programs annually on alternating months. Similarly, although GIG leadership does participate in the ASTD Leaders Conference (ALC), Chapter Leaders Day (CLD), and the International Conference and Expo (ICE), these are at the expense of the leaders. Because the Chapter is capable of generating more revenue, they are able to send leadership to these events.

Having virtually all dimensions fall within the Emerging or Solid categories makes sense. The GIG is at the end of its second year. In order to build across dimensions, the GIG will focus on quality programming. By doing this, we will be able to become stronger in the membership and financial dimensions as well. Because the GIG's strongest area is Communication, we will use this strength and build on it to help enhance our focus. As demonstrated in Zenger's competency study, building on strengths increases performance across multiple dimensions (Zenger, 2011).

I engeret you de additional work regarding the origin of the tool you may and how it was created. Government out how it was created a siterature work in leaderly review or future work in leaderly comes. All of your leaderly work in ASTD is addressed in Lead II, III, V, VI.
